

USMCA Economic Predictions ARE IN.

ITC Predicts Very Modest Economic Gains From the USMCA

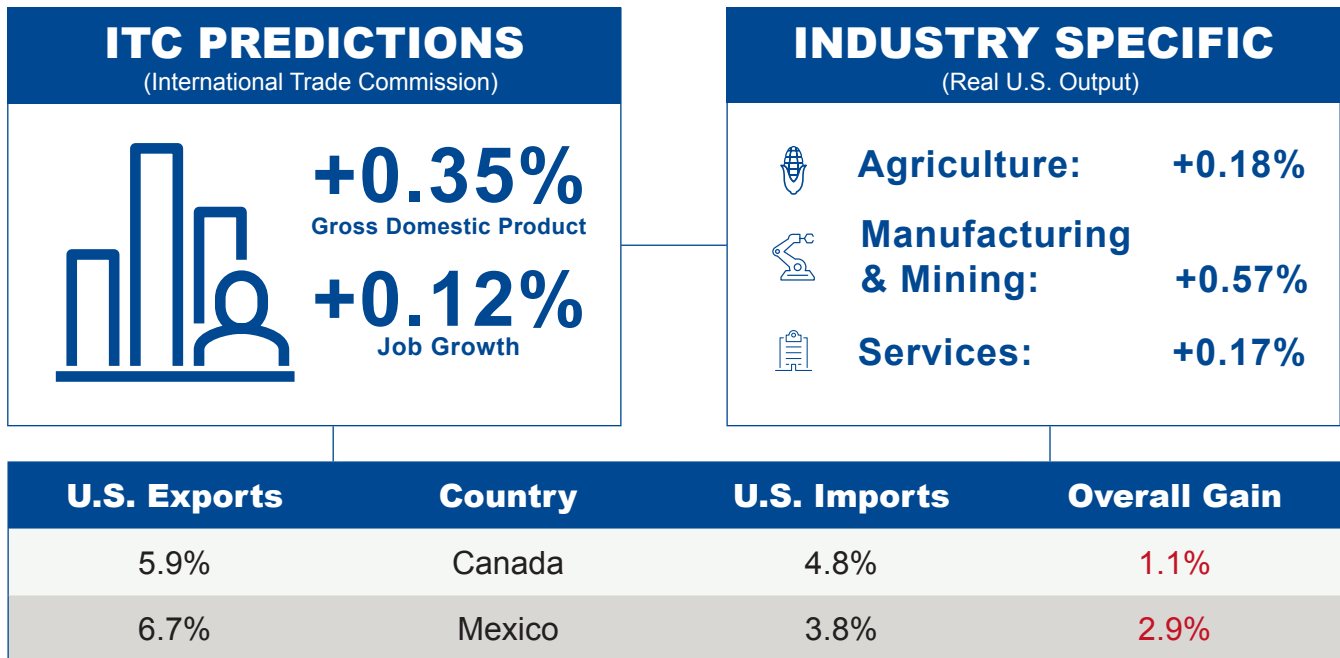

The International Trade Commission (ITC), an agency of the federal government, predicts the United States-Mexico-Canada Agreement (USMCA, often referred to as NAFTA 2.0) would increase U.S. Gross Domestic Product by only +0.35% and increase U.S. jobs by only +0.12%.

However, we've learned from NAFTA that such predictions cannot be trusted.

Meanwhile, USMCA Critics Point to the Almost Certain Loss of American Sovereignty From the USMCA!

The USMCA would establish a "Free Trade Commission" with powers that would provide a steppingstone to a supranational North American Union government over the U.S., Mexico, and Canada, similar to the role played by the European Commission in establishing the European Union over the 28 formerly independent nations of Europe.

Our Rights Are at Stake!

In America our rights are secured by our sovereign, constitutional republic. If we lose our sovereignty to a supranational North American Union, then our rights would be at the mercy of this less accountable layer of government.

American sovereignty and rights are worth much more than the iffy, small economic gains predicted for the USMCA.
