

Anarchy: An Eyewitness Account - TRAILER

Leah Southwell was an American living in Chile when a communist revolution broke out.

People took to the streets to scream their grievances, burn the subways and churches, tag the entire city with graffiti, block traffic, break the storefront glass of department stores, loot, and viciously attack police. The media focused its coverage on the protesters' and criminals' complaints and painted anyone in authority as the aggressors. As of late, due to pressure from the leftist activists, Chile is working to change its constitution.

Sound familiar?

In her sobering presentation, "Anarchy: An Eyewitness Account," Southwell, a coordinator for The John Birch Society, discusses the parallels of what she saw in Chile and what has been recently happening in America since 2020.

Is America, like Chile, undergoing an attempted communist coup?
