While we sincerely congratulate President-elect Trump on his election and hope that he keeps his election promises, we have seen that in the past, the election rhetoric continues after the election, but the action is secured by establishment politicians, which end up scuttling those promises. Granted, it's very early, but that's the type of foundation that appears to be being built in this case too. It looks as though the establishment is using this as an opportunity to ensure its agenda is adhered to by lining up placement potentials.
