So here we are 100+ days into the Trump administration, which has made some progress on the president's campaign promises. Some good people have been brought into the administration, but unfortunately, it seems the trend is to get rid of any of the Constitutional conservative influence and replace it with those sympathetic to the political establishment. Granted, it is early, so perhaps we should cut him some slack, but it's obvious that the political establishment globalists aren't passively sitting by, so neither should constitutionalists.
